Why Calvin and Loyola?

Did the early paths of John Calvin (Protestant Reformer) and Ignatius Loyola (founder of the Jesuits) cross as students? Both certainly attended the University of Paris in the 1520s. The University at that time comprised about forty colleges situated in the Latin Quarter of the city. Calvin and Loyola were both students at the celebrated College de Montaigu, Calvin arriving there in the latter part of 1523. Loyola's dates of attendance are uncertain but may have overlapped.

The College was a tightly knit community of about 200 students and, under the tutelage of Pierre Tempete, followed an austere daily regime. Students rose at 4am in order to begin lessons at 5am with study ending with a 9pm bedtime.

It is tantalizing to muse that these two giants of the sixteenth century Church shared a common education experience and yet subsequently travelled along very different spiritual paths. Reason enough to merit a unique conference in Ireland which will explore and unpack something of the points of comparability and contrast between these two Montaigu old boys.
